Matteo Vallicelli is an Italian musician with a passion for international adventures.

From 2013 to 2024, he was the drummer for "The Soft Moon," a U.S.-based project that took him to some of the coolest independent music clubs and festivals across Europe, America, and Asia.

They had the thrill of opening for legends like Depeche Mode and Nine Inch Nails.

Since 2017, Matteo has been exploring his love for electronic music with a solo project with a focus on soundtracks. He has put out two albums, performing in both Europe and the USA, and had the chance to work with amazing artists like Trentemøller and Alessandro Cortini.

In 2023, Matteo composed the soundtrack for the docu-film "Cocoricò Tapes" by Francesco Tavella. He also dabbles in composing music for commercials and short films.

On the side, Matteo has DJing and music-curating experience for clubs, shops, museums, and fashion shows. He handles the mixing and sound design for his own tracks, blending analog synthesizers, classical instruments, and software to explore themes of utopia, the future, and technology.
